basic daily tasks can be a difficult, frustrating process. For caregivers, knowing when and how to help your loved one complete these activities in a way that supports both their health and their independence is a struggle. This book discusses activities of daily living that commonly present difficulties for individuals with Alzheimer's disease. It also offers information about identifying your loved one's specific struggles and working through those challenges with them. The simple checklists in this book will help you learn how to:

- Assess your loved ones' need for help bathing and dressing and provide that help tactfully.
- Handle incontinence issues in a hygienic way that preserves your loved one's dignity.
- Communicate with your loved one in the early, middle, and late stages of the disease.
- Provide assistance with cooking, housekeeping, and other key tasks.
- Cope with behavioral changes like aggression and depression as the disease progresses.

Through a combination of checklists and practical advice, this book helps you provide safe, encouraging care for your loved one while coping with the stress that accompanies caregiving. Every day is different when you live with Alzheimer's disease. Start learning how to make those days better for everyone.

Abstract: School food service personnel are presented with a handbook designed to help foodservice operations provide food that is wholesome, sanitary and safe. Foods eaten by children must be free of bacterial pathogens. Microbial contamination or chemical toxicants in foods may cause food poisoning or foodborne disease. Thus, school foodservice has a responsibility to maintain high standards of cleanliness. Guidelines are given for basic sanitation practices in food storage, preparation, transportation, handling and clean-up. Personal hygiene hints are recommended. Insect and rodent pests represent a health hazard which can be avoided by prevention and control. Safety and sanitation checklists may be used as effective management tools for improving foodservice facilities. Appendices include a bibliography of information resources, food storage rules, a self-inspection questionnaire, and subject outlines with audiovisual aids for use in inservice training programs for foodservice personnel.

Group homes emerged in the United States in the 1970s as a solution to the failure of the large institutions that, for more than a century, segregated and abused people with intellectual and developmental disabilities. Yet community services have not, for the most part, delivered on the promises of rights, self-determination, and integration made more than thirty years ago, and critics predominantly portray group homes simply as settings of social control. Making Life Work is a clear-eyed ethnography of a New York City group home based on more than a year of field research. Jack Levinson shows how the group home needs the knowledgeable and voluntary participation of residents and counselors alike. The group home is an actual workplace for counselors, but for residents group home work involves working on themselves to become more autonomous. Levinson reveals that rather than being seen as the antithesis of freedom, the group home must be understood as representing the fundamental dilemmas between authority and the individual in contemporary liberal societies. No longer inmates but citizens, these people who are presumed—rightly or wrongly—to lack the capacity for freedom actually govern themselves. Levinson, a former group home counselor, demonstrates that the group home depends on the very capacities for independence and individuality it cultivates in the residents. At the same time, he addresses the complex relationship between services and social control in the history of intellectual and developmental disabilities, interrogating broader social service policies and the role of clinical practice in the community.
