SAM, an engaging and interactive online learning environment, transforms students into Microsoft Office and computer concept masters. Students observe, practice, then actively apply their new skills live in the application. The best part is, it's working! In a survey of students using the platform, 73% felt SAM better prepared them for interacting in the Microsoft Office environment.

The back end is in a trusted location that all have access to it. Where do I check the UNC path to the backend in Access 2010. I relinked the backend tables with my current front end. I also noticed that the functionality to "Add new location" in the User Locations is greyed out on my computer. I have to contact corporate IT about this.

The AllowEdits property is a rather blunt instrument. True, and setting the Locked and Enabled properties will work. If you only have one or two controls you need to allow the user to interact with, you can also use the Got/Lost Focus events, or the Enter/Exit events, you can just toggle the AllowEdits when the user moves into a control where they need control.
